

Dear Valued IEEE Member,

I would like to thank you for being an important part of our organization. This is a general reminder to all subscribers that IEEE personal digital libraries are designed for your personal research, staying up-to-date in your field, and helping you develop personal patents. However, organizational or shared use is prohibited. Please be assured that this is no indication of any current violation of your subscription(s).

Please be informed that when accessing your subscription the following terms apply:

Recommended Use:

- ▶ Download documents at work for your personal use.
- ▶ Use these documents for further research, patent development and other functions related to your job responsibilities.
- ▶ Cite downloaded documents in a research paper or patent you are developing for yourself or your employer.
- ▶ Print or photocopy downloaded documents for your individual use.

Prohibited Use:

- ▶ Sharing your login information or online subscription access with others.
- ▶ Sharing your electronic or print versions of downloaded documents with others.
- ▶ Excessively downloading articles.
- ▶ Posting any downloaded documents to an organizational or peer-to-peer web site.

As an IEEE subscriber, you are welcome to use your digital subscription for yourself in your personal and professional activities. If your colleagues also require access to IEEE documents, or you need additional IEEE information, then a personal subscription may no longer be the best option.

For more information on organizational-wide options, please visit our subscription options page, or contact mypersonalsub@ieee.org.

Sari Frances
Manager of Digital License Compliance
s.frances@ieee.org